Routledge launches new research collection discussing US Presidential Election

bit.ly/routUSA2012

MESSAGE BEGINS

On Tuesday 6th November 2012 the American people will be voting to elect the next President of the United States. Will the incumbent President, Barack Obama (Democratic), be re-elected for a second term; or will his main rival, Mitt Romney (Republican), become the 45th President of the United States?

To mark this event Routledge has put together a collection of journal articles exploring a range of topics relating to the 2012 US Presidential Election; considering the presidential candidates, the main election issues and the broader political impact of these elections. This collection can be accessed at: bit.ly/routUSA2012.

The US Election Collection includes over 120 key articles from nearly 100 top journals including Survival, The Washington Quarterly and Congress & the Presidency.

This collection is available online from the 20th August 2012 until 31st January 2013 and includes many free-to-access articles.
